

I see both sides, but right now would say republicans in relation to January 6, 2021

user1

I believe republicans are,
especially evangelical republicans.
They don't practice what they preach.

user2

I agree that democrats are hypocritical as well, they shifted from being a party for the people to supporting special interests. I think class is the real divide.

user2

I try to be more focused on measurable things like constitutional adherence and stay away from the emotional side of religion

user1

Democrats can definitely pick and choose which social causes they support.

user1

I don't think that the aspects of religious influence is immeasurable

user2

I'm just disappointed in the lack of unity after the election.

user1

I agree, things aren't as black and white as media makes it appear.

user2

i don't call myself a democrat even tho if i have to vote i vote democrat

user2

I worry that this behavior sets a tone for the midterms and won't be resolved until the next presidential election

user1